— No więc w pierwszej będzie salon, w drugiej letnia sypialnia, w trzeciej będę trzymał swoje książki i różne skrawki papieru, w następnej przybory do malowania, a w ostatniej, wiszącej najbliższej spiżarni, urządzę sobie jadalnię.

O takim poziomie życia Arietta nigdy nawet nie marzyła; niesamowita pompa — i to wszystko jest udziałem młodego, samotnego Pożyczalskiego!

— Musisz mieć chyba mnóstwo mebli — powiedziała po chwili milczenia.

— Nic podobnego — odrzekł. — Ładne pokoje nie wymagają wielu mebli.

— A co tam malujesz tymi swoimi przyborami do malowania?

— Obrazy.

— Na tych skrawkach papieru?

— Bywa i tak. Ale na górnej półce w pokoju bibliotecznym znajduje się rulon pięknego płótna. Papier niełatwo jest przetranszować. Używam go więc głównie do pisania.

— Listów?

— Wierszy — wyjaśnił i się zaczerwienił. — Czytam przede wszystkim poezję — ciągnął, jakby się usprawdliwiając. — Książki o mniejszych rozmiarach trzymam tam. — Wskazał głową ptaszarnię. — Te, które zabrałem.

Wielkie drzwi od strony zachodniej stały otworem i promienie słońca wpadały z przedsionka do wewnątrz. Zobaczyła, jak pani Mullings wchodzi, a potem cofa się odrobinę, żeby przepuścić dwóch mężczyzn niosących dużą donicę z jakąś rośliną wyglądającą jak krzew, która przypominała Ariette przątkowane geranium.

— Dwanaście, powiadacie?! — krzyknęła rozpaczliwie pani Mullings.

(Jakież echo rozchodzi się w pustym kościele od ludzkich głosów!)

— Tak, proszę pani. Wyhodowaliśmy je specjalnie dla kościoła. Gdzie pani każe postawić te donice?

Pani Mullings rozejrzała się dokoła bezradnie.

— A co pani radzi, panno Oktawio?

Arietta wychyliła się poza galeryjkę. No, nareszcie zobaczyła swoją ukochaną pannę Oktawię, która stała z miną raczej obojętną w progu przedsionka. Była biała i wyglądała na zmęczoną; zawsze była szczupła, lecz teraz zeszczupiała chyba jeszcze bardziej.

— Może gdzieś z tyłu, po prawej stronie, nie uważa pani? — powiedziała nieśmiało.

Wówczas wpadła jak bomba Kitty Whitlache, a na jej twarzy malowało się osupienie.

I Saw a Beautiful Woodpecker

picture-book
14 x 20 cm
hardcover
128 pp

- An authentic children's diary from holidays interrupted by the war.

The eight-year old Michał is given a task for the summer: he has to exercise his handwriting and to calligraph one sentence a day in a notebook. That's the background for an exceptional diary of a child. Starting from mid-July until mid-September, the boy makes daily a very simple note about an event that he'd been witnessing that day. These were family walks and meetings, plays and observations of nature. That summer however was not a usual one. It was 1939. On 1st of September the war began... Eighty years later this extraordinary manuscript – the authentic diary of a child from the holidays interrupted by the war – has been completed with striking paintings to make a unique book.

A brilliantly written story, that follows the journey of two words – 'Man' and 'God' – which have abandoned the pages of their dictionary. Man and God usually spend their time within the old pages of a used volume of an old dictionary. However one day, our two heroes decide to go on a quest to unravel the unknown territory of surrounding books and notes. This journey takes them to bizarre and forgotten places of the language, where they encounter other words and their meanings.

Signs of Silence Rasa Jančiauskaitė

picture book | 19 x 23.5 cm | hardcover | 64 pp

This inventive and expressive book leads a reader into the world that is not so far away, yet we know very little about it: the universe of the hearing-impaired. We get to know it via six short accounts, in which the deaf recollect situations from their childhood. These reminiscences focus on what's positive and bright and do not show deafness as an impairment, but a different way of life and of maintaining relationships with others.

The book 'Signs of Silence' allows us to cross an invisible border, separating the world of those who hear from the world of those who don't. It gives voice to those whom we do not hear on a daily basis, and encourages to cross this line again in the future.
